When a Taliban insurgent recently tried to kill Malala Yousafzai because she advocated that young girls should be allowed to attend school, it reminded the whole world that there are some cultures where women are not afforded the same rights and opportunities as males

Here in our own school district we have families where the parents refuse to allow their daughters to participate in The Ivy League Connection simply because they are female and as such they don't even want them to consider attending college.

From your own experiences, what do you know of this and as young female leaders of your community, what would you do to counter this thinking and convince these families that their daughters should be encouraged to become better educated?
